PREFACE

DURING the fifty years that have elapsed since the appearance of the Second Edition of Dr. Smith's Smaller Latin-English Dictionary the researches of scholars have succeeded in producing more accurate texts of the classical authors and a clearer understanding of the character and history of the Latin language; and the teaching of the classics has simultaneously undergone some change. The primary object of the present edition was, therefore, to bring up to date the information contained in this dictionary and to provide the student with the means to a better appreciation of the meaning and usage of the words and language which he is handling. While it seemed at the outset undesirable to make radical alterations in the form of a dictionary which over a long period of time has enjoyed a wide popularity, it has, however, been found advisable and necessary to rewrite practically the whole work; and a brief statement of the principles that have been followed in the revision will be useful in demonstrating the points in which this edition differs from its predecessor.

The treatment of word-meanings follows as far as is possible a logical method—the significations being placed in the logical (though not necessarily historical) order of development. By the excision of many of the superfluous translations of examples cited in the Second Edition, it has been found practicable to extend the scope of many articles and to achieve a fuller documentation. This is a clear gain in an edition which aims at making clear to the student the types of phrase in which a word is found (cf., for example, the new treatment of diciō, exspectātiō, nōmen, imperium, signum, silentium, spēs, habēō, faciō, etc.). The present work is, however, not intended to be an abridged Index Totius Latinitatis, and its illustrations by quotation have had to undergo a rigorous process of selection, the authors chosen being those usually read in schools and by junior students of the Universities. Livy will be found to have received more generous treatment than is normally allotted to him by lexicographers, while Plautus and Caesar gain at the expense of Pliny the Elder and Celsus, neither of whom, I imagine, is much read by young scholars at the present time. Pliny's Letters are also drawn on more than in the Second Edition, and the two Plinii are now distinguished as (i.) Plin. and (ii.) Plin. Ep. and Plin. Pan. Cicero's Letters are specially designated Cic. Ep. by way of differentiation from his Speeches, etc.—a useful distinction in view of the occasionally colloquial phraseology of his Letters.

“The question of orthography had exercised Cassiodorus in the sixth century,” and the correct spelling of many Latin words is still an almost insoluble mystery by reason of the marked diversity of forms offered by traditional evidence. Editors give various spellings of quite common words, and therefore an attempt is here made to notice the variants, while at the same time attention is concentrated on the form which is conceived to be either best warranted or most strongly supported by editorial usage. This twofold criterion may appear to suggest inconsistency; but in the absence of any completely satisfactory standard method of spelling (though the work of Brambach, Corssen, Neue, and Professor Lindsay has brought this ideal nearer), no simpler way can be justifiable. The letter j now disappears, but v (for consonantal u) is still retained, partly because many editors (e.g. of the majority of the Oxford Classical Texts) keep it, and partly because experience has shown that students find the u forms difficult. cottīdiē and querella are written, though not without some misgivings. Plautine spelling in general follows the forms adopted by Ritschl or Professor Lindsay in his Oxford Classical Text, though here, too, there is room for much doubt and considerable difference of opinion. Forms like maiior, peiior are noticed. The ACC. pl. masc. and fem. of Adjectives and Nouns in -is (with GEN. pl. in -ium) has been given as -is, though some doubt may be felt about the general applicability of the rule. Some groups of words which are printed in some texts as compound words will here be found for the most part in their original form, e.g. magnō opere, quā rē, quō modō for magnopere, quārē, quōmodo. In the spelling of names the traditional form has generally been retained, and, e.g., Dryantīdēs has been retained in preference to Merkel's apparently more attractive Dryantiadēs.

An entirely new departure has been made in marking only long vowels with the quantity-sign at the head of articles, except where a vowel is definitely known to have been long or short (when it is marked ¨), or where it is desirable to call attention to a short quantity. This procedure should simplify for the student the problem of the nature of vowel-sounds in all words, though it involves as a necessary consequence (i.) the marking of all long vowels, and (ii.) the assumption that all vowels not marked long are short. It is difficult to decide in every case (where verse does not afford help) what is the quantity of a vowel. This difficulty is particularly great for vowels preceding a double consonant, but there are manifest advantages for an improved pronunciation in the attempt to discover and put forward a clear and simple scheme of quantity-marking which, though at the risk perhaps of error and almost certainly of difference of opinion among philologists, does aim at a form of completeness. In two cases criticism may be levelled at the quantities presented here: (i.) in the Participles ending in

-ssus, where this edition gives, e.g., fōssus, grēssus, from fodiō, gradior, and (ii.) in the terminations given of the inceptive verbs of the four conjugations, viz. -āscō, -ēscō, -iscō, -iscō. The vowel in the termination of the old (? Optative) forms like faxim is of doubtful quantity, though many philologists would prefer faxim. There is a special difficulty with compounds of iaciō, e.g. iniciō. Poetic usage shows the first syllable long in the present tenses, because the word was pronounced inyiciō, but the initial vowel remained short. How should the problem be made clear to the student? If īniciō is written, it must be understood to be an illegitimate use of the quantity-mark, but no better alternative seems to exist. The same is true of māior and pēior, for which verse required a long first syllable, though the vowel remained short; but the student might be misled if maior, peior were given. In the case of ī and ō before -nf- and -ns-, there is good authority for the lengthening of the vowel, as also for ā, ē, and ū before -ns. In the quotations from authors, the ABL. fem. in -ā is always marked long.

At the head of articles on verbs, the principal parts are usually given in full, except in the case of regular verbs of the 1st, 2nd, and 4th conjugations, where it was sufficient to write only the Infinitive. Forms like faxō (? Future, or Aorist Subjunctive) and faxim (? Aorist Optative, or Subjunctive) present some difficulty; but the context often helps to make a decision between the alternative moods. The verbals in -ū when cited (e.g. herbae formidolosissimae esu) are described as ABL. sing. m. Nouns derived from the verb, though there is reason to suppose that they may have been Datives or Locatives in origin.

The etymological material, placed conveniently in square brackets near the beginning of each article, is reduced to the barest minimum, though great care has been taken to ensure the greatest possible measure of accuracy in the derivations or comparisons suggested—these being in most cases limited to Latin or Greek words. This work was already too far advanced to allow alterations or improvements based on the revised edition of Walde's Wörterbuch, which is in process of production, and on the new etymological dictionary of Ernout and Meillet. Romance derivatives (also in square brackets) have retained their place at the end of the articles, though some have been omitted as obvious, while others have been corrected to the current spelling. The connexion of some of the derivatives with Latin must inevitably at times seem obscure, but the keen Romance student will pursue difficult cases in specifically etymological works.

The names which were placed en masse at the end of the Second Edition have now been restored to their rightful position in the main body of the dictionary. Their numbers have been diminished by the exclusion of many place-names which can be sought more readily and usefully in an atlas. (Some difficulty has been felt in dealing with the spelling of modern equivalents, where known, of some ancient place-names, as gazetteers and atlases are not agreed on the forms.) Mythological detail has also been lessened in order to give more space to the word-articles, which are conceived to be more important to the young student. It is hoped that the general result of these changes of form and construction in the present edition will be to afford the greatest assistance possible within the limits of this Smaller Latin-English Dictionary in attaining a clear-cut conception of the meaning, history, and associations of Latin words. Latin lexicography, as a science, is still very imperfect, though there have recently been welcome signs, in this country and on the Continent, that the much-neglected Livy is at last being recognised to be really deserving of consideration as an authority for the best Classical Latin; but even he will not be adequately treated in the larger lexica until a complete Spezialwörterbuch of Livy is produced.

In the printing of this new edition the opportunity has been taken to use larger and more legible type than that of the Second Edition, and to print in two columns instead of in three.

The compiler of a dictionary, even on the present small scale, is in the unhappy position of being forced to borrow freely from the vast collection of the works of other scholars without the possibility of making acknowledgment for the borrowings. But I should be sorely deficient in gratitude if I did not express my deep sense of obligation to the work of the late Professor C. Flamstead Walters and of Professor R. S. Conway, whose notes for a Latin dictionary were kindly placed at my disposal by John Murray and have been of inestimable service in their constructive lexicographical method and in their fruitfulness of suggestion. And I am conscious of my great indebtedness to various English lexica and, beyond them, to the invaluable dictionaries of Forcellini-de Vit and Georges, and to Krebs-Schmalz' Antibarbarus der lateinischen Sprache.

A SMALLER LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY

A

A, a, indecl. f. (sc. littera), oftener n. I. The primitive Indo-European ā is in Latin, as in Greek, represented by ā, ē, or ō (ā, ē, o), and ā by ā, ē, or ō (ā, η, ω). a has often been retained in Latin where e has been substituted in Greek: thus mag-nus corresponds to μέγ-ας, maneo to μένω. So also a appears in Latin in some cases where o is found in Greek, as in lavo beside λούω (= λοῦω), da-re beside δι-δῶ-ναι. Sometimes, however, we have e or o in Latin for original a, where the latter is retained in Greek; cf. mol-lis with μαλ-ακός, levis (= leguis) with ἐ-λαχ-ύς. II. In Latin compounds a long by nature generally remains unchanged, as in de-labor, e-mano. a short by nature, followed by a labial or l, is sometimes changed to u, as in occupo (capio), insulto (salio); sometimes to i, as in prohibeo (habeo), dissilio (salio). Before other consonants it generally becomes i, as in reticeo (taceo), profiteor (fateor). If it is followed by two consonants, as well as preceded by one, it regularly becomes e, as in condemno (damno), perfectus (factus). III. Latin a, whether long or short by nature, is, for the most part, represented in French, in an accented syllable, either by e, cāput (chef), mārc (mer), pāter (père), nāsus (nez), amārus (amer), amāre (aimer), amātus (aimé), mortālis (mortel), or by ai—and this chiefly, though not exclusively, before m, n or a guttural, fāmes (faim), mānus (main), sānus (sain), mācer (maigre), ācer (aigre), āla (aile), clārus (clair). Sometimes it is not changed, as guāre (car), avārus (avar). a in position mostly remains unchanged, as arbor (arbre), carrus (char), carmen (charme); before c it regularly becomes ai, as factus (fait), tractus (trait). Unaccented a is sometimes unchanged, as salutem (salut), parare (parer), saponem (savon); it commonly becomes e, as caballus (cheval). IV. As an abbreviation A=Aulus; on voting tablets A (i.e. Antiquo) denoted the rejection of a proposed law; in judicial trials A=Absolveo, therefore called by Cicero lit tera salutaria. In dates A.D. = ante diem; A.U.C. = anno urbis conditae.

ā, ab, abs (aps, Pl.), (cf. Gk. ἀπό), Adv. and Prep. I. Adverb. Only when compounded with verbs, nouns and adjectives, exc. perh. in phrases like: a milibus passuum quindecim, fifteen miles away. ā is found before m and v, e.g. āmovo, āverto; ab before vowels and d, g, l, n, r, s, e.g. abdo, abluo, etc.; abs before c and t, e.g. abscondo, abstineo; as before p, e.g. asporto; au before f in sufero and asufugio. N.B. the meaning away or off prominent in verbs, etc., thus compounded, viz. 1. away from a place or connexion: abducere, abripere, abicere, aufugere. 2. away from one's person: amittere, aspellere, abruere, abiurare. 3. away, of source: aboriri. 4. away, of things running away: affluere, abundare. 5. away from proper or natural direction: abiungere, absimilis, absonus. 6. away, of destruction or consumption: absorbere, absumere, abuti. II. Preposition. (ā before consonants; ab before vowels and h, and before some consonants, esp. s; abs almost only in the phrase abs te.) Always followed by an ABL. of Separation, away from, off, starting from, beginning from. A. Of Space. 1. With verbs of motion, rest (esp. distance): ab urbe discedere, a castris abesse. 2. Of the starting-point of thought, the view-point from which: a tergo, in the rear; ab oriente, on the east; ab decumanā portā, at the main gate. B. Of Time. 1. starting from, reckoning from, since, after: ab sole orto, ab urbe conditā, ab horā tertiā, a puero (from childhood). 2. from the age of (with card. num.): tirones ab sedecim annis milites scribebat, Liv. 3. straight from, immediately after: recens a vulnere, Verg.; recens ab incendio, Liv. C. Transf. 1. Denoting separation, removal, starting from, ceasing from: a supplicio tuo se continuit populus, Cic.; a defensione desistere, Caes.; quartus ab Arcesilā, Cic.; quantum mutatus ab illo Hectore, Verg.; initium capit ab aliquā re, Caes. 2. Denoting source, origin: a. parentage: ortos a Germanis, Caes.; principum a Corā atque Pometiā, Liv. b. agency, authorship: translate by, though the real meaning is from; the action of the verb originates in or springs from the person in the ABL. This usage is restricted to persons and animals, exc. for occasional personifications of things: ab Gallis sollicitarentur, Caes.; ab elephantis obtriti, Liv.; ab iniquitate locorum oppugnabantur Poeni, Liv. 3. Denoting cause, motive; out of, from, in respect of, from a certain quarter: ab singulari amore scribo, Balb. ap. Cic. Ep.; linguam ab inrisu exserens, Liv.; laborare a re frumentariā, Caes.; aliquid ab liberalitate alicuius expectare, Caes.; doleo ab oculis, ab animo, Pl.; timere, meture ab aliquo, Ter. 4. Denoting point of view; from the point of view of, on the side of. Hence of proximity: ut nemo a senatu et a bonorum causā steterit, took the side of the senate, etc., Cic.; securior ab Samnitibus agere, Liv. Hence the phrases designating an office or professional post (mostly post-Aug.): servus (or libertus) ab epistulis, a rationibus, private secretary, accountant, etc. Also a manu, a balneis, ab actis, etc.

B

B, b, indecl. n. I. The Romans probably gave the sound p in many cases where they wrote b, especially when the b was final, as in ab, ob, sub, before p or t, or when those preps. were used in comp., before the same letters, when no assimilation took place in writing. Quintilian says 'cum dico obtinuit, secundam b litteram ratio poscit, aures magis audiunt p.' Hence, we find variations between bs and ps: cf. Abasyrtus and Apsyrtus, opsonium and obsonium: gen., however, the Gk. ψ was rendered by ps. II. Latin initial b corresponds in only a few words to Greek β, as in balbus (βαλβος), ballo (βαλῶ), bos (βους), bilo (βαίλω), (ἐ-βη-ν). In bibo it corresponds irregularly to π; in balaena, initial b represents φ. b in the middle of words corresponds to Indo-European bh, and therefore to Greek β; as in albus (ἀλφός), ambo (ἄμφω), nebula (νέφος), umbilicus (ὀμφαλός); in a few instances it corresponds to dh, and so to Greek θ, as in ruber (ἐ-ρυθρός), uber (ὄδθα). In words borrowed from the Greek, b sometimes represents π, as in buxus (πίθος), Burrus (Ἰλύππος), carbasus (κάπρασος). III. In bis, bellum, bonus, b has arisen from an earlier Latin du. In publicus (= populicus), it has taken the place of p. In aspelo, asporto (absp.), the b is omitted: in aufero, aufugio (abf.), it is changed to u. IV. Latin b most commonly remains unchanged in French, esp. at the beginnings of words, as bonus (bon), bibere (boire); but in a good many instances turns to v, as cubare (couver), ebrius (ivre), habere (avoir), subinde (souvent). So also in Italian avere. V. In Inscr., B generally denotes bonus or bene: thus B. D. = Bona Dea; B. M. = Bene Merenti.

C

C, c, the third letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponding originally in sound to the Greek Γ. I. The Duilian inscription gives LECIONES for legiones ; and even to the latest times C and Cn stood for Gaius and Gnaeus. But from an early period there was a tendency to give to C the sound of K : in inscriptions Consul is represented by the abbreviation

Cos, not Kos ; and K was retained as a written symbol only before a, as in KAL for Kalendae and Calumnia. II. c in Latin corresponds regularly to Gk. κ. Sometimes where π is found in Greek, Latin, following the orig. Indo-European, has c (or qu) : thus coquo, πέπω ; linquo, λείπω ; voco, φέπος ; oculus, ὄμμα. In the Germanic languages it is represented by h and sometimes, in the middle of a word, by g : cf. calamus, O. H. G. halm. III. Changes of c in French. 1. of c into ch : cf. Lat. caballus, calidus, canis, etc., with Fr. cheval, chaud, chien, etc. 2. Of c into s : cf. Lat. facinus, licere, placere, etc. with Fr. faisons, loisir, plaisir, etc. 3. Of c into g : cf. Lat. acer, etc. : with Fr. aigre, etc. 4. Omission of c : i. Between two vowels : cf. Lat. focus, nocere, etc. : with Fr. feu, nuire, etc. ii. followed by t : cf. Lat. dictus : Fr. dit, lectus : Fr. lit. iii. followed by r : cf. Lat. lacrima, with Fr. larme. IV. as an abbrev. C stands for Gaius, and reversed, Q, for Gaia. Upon voting tablets it meant condemnno. As a numeral it denotes centum.

caballus, i, m. [καβάλλης], an inferior saddle- or pack-horse : a nag, hack : Lucil., Hor., Sen. Ep. ; of Pegasus (in jest) : Juv. Prov. : optat arare caballus (of discontent with one's own work), Hor.

D

D, d, the fourth letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponding to the Greek Delta (Δ). 1. Changes of d to other letters and v. v. 1. d to t. At the end of words t was frequently substituted for it in early times ; e.g. haut for haud in Plautus. t is sometimes changed to d in the derivation of words : e.g. from mentior comes mendax. 2. du to b. At the beginning of some words, du followed by a vowel has been changed into b : e.g. : duellum, bellum ; duis, bis ; duonus, bonus. In (d)uiginti, the d has been dropped. 3. d to r : e.g. : ar for ad (v. arbit). 4. d to l : e.g. : lingua, lingua ; odor (ὀδῶν), oleo. 5. In compound words, d at the end of the first portion of the compound is assimilated to the initial consonant of the second portion if this is c, p, or t ; e.g. accedo, ap-parare, at-tingo ; and occasionally to q, e.g. quic-quam for quid-quam. When, in such cases, d is followed by s and another consonant, it is sometimes omitted altogether : e.g. a-scendo, a-stringo ; and also when d is followed by the nasal gn : e.g. : a-gnatus, a-gnosco. 6. In inflexion, d is omitted before s, or (rarely) assimilated :

e.g. : custos for custod-s : lae-si, for laed-si ; but ces-si for ced-si. II. Changes of d in the Romance languages : 1. d into z : especially dī into z : e.g. : ardens, pendulus, It. arzenite, penzolo ; Lat. medius, radius, It. mezzo, razzo. 2. d into g or j : e.g. : Lat. hodie, It. oggi ; Lat. dies, diurnus, Fr. jour. 3. d into l : e.g. : Lat. cicada, hedera, It. cicala, ellera ; Lat. cauda, Sp. cola. 4. d into r (rare) : e.g. : Lat. lampas, lampadis, Sp. lampara. 5. d into n : e.g. : Lat. lampas, lampadis ; It. lampara ; Lat. perdis, It. pernice. 6. Omission of d : in French, between two vowels : e.g. : Lat. audire, fides, nudus, videre, Fr. ouir, foi, nu, voir. In Italian at the end of words : e.g. : Lat. ad, modo, fides, It. a, mò, fiè. III. In the oldest period of the Latin language, the ABL. sing. ended in d : MARID, DICTATORE, in ALTOD MARID, on the Col. Rostr. Several prepositions and other prefixes originally ended in d, which d was afterwards usually dropped : e.g. prod in prod-ire, prod-esse ; red in red-ire, red-dere. IV. As an abbreviation, D usually stands for the praenomen Decimus ; also for Deus, Divus, Dominus, Decurio, etc. ; in epitaphs, D. M. = Dis Manibus. N.B.—The use of the symbol D as the representative of 500 is a modern corruption : the original mark was the half of the original Tuscan numeral ① or CIO = 1000, which printers have found it convenient to represent by D.

E

E, e, indecl. n. (or sc. littera), f. the fifth letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponding to both the ε and the η of the Greeks. 1. e is substituted for a : 1. in compounds of roots which contain a before a double consonant : e.g. : scando, descendo. It sometimes, but rarely, takes the place of ā : e.g. : gradior, progredior. In some cases double forms exist, the one with the substituted, the other with the original vowel : e.g. : conspergo and conspargo from spergo. 2. in the reduplication of roots with a : e.g. : cado, cecidi ; tango (root tag-), tetigi. 3. in the perfect of some verbs which have ā in the present : e.g. : iacio, iēci ; facio, fēci.

II. e is changed into i. 1. in a few compound verbs : e.g. : specio, conspicio ; premo, imprimo : but generally the e of the simple verb remains unchanged. 2. in the inflexions of substantives : e.g. : nomen, nominis. III. e takes the place of i. 1. in the neuter forms of adjectives in is ; e.g. : facilis, facile ; similis, simile. 2. in the Nom. and Acc. sing. of a class of neut. substantives : e.g. : ovile (stem ovili-).

3. in the Nom. forms aedes, canes, etc., for aedis, canis, etc. IV. e in verbal roots is sometimes changed into o in derived substantives : e.g. : tēgo, toga ; pēdo, pondus. The formative suffix os (orig. as) of neuter nouns (which in the nom. has become us), sinks in the oblique cases to es ; as opus (opus), operis (for opes-is). e takes the place of o also in velle from volo. V. e is rarely found instead of u ; thus from iūro are formed deiēro, and peiēro. VI. ē is omitted in the inflexions of many nouns, which in the Nom. sing. end in ēr : e.g. : mater, matris ; magister, magistri ; pulcher, pulchra, pulchrum. VII. changes of e in the Romance languages. 1. e long or before double consonant generally remains unchanged, as spero, Fr. espère ; crudelis, Fr. cruel ; ferrum, It. ferro, Fr. fer ; terra, It. terra, Fr. terre, but is sometimes changed i, into oi in French : cf. avena, credo, with Fr. avoine, crois ; ii. into i in French : cf. cera, ecclesia, temo, with Fr. cire, église, timon ; iii. into ei in French before n ; cf. frenum, Fr. frein ; plenus, Fr. plein ; serenus, Fr. serein. 2. short e is generally changed i, into ie ; cf. fel, gelu, with It. fielo, gielo ; fel, ferus, hedera, with Fr. fiel, fier, lierre. ii. sometimes into i ; cf. deus, ego, meus, with It. dio, io, mio ; decem, nego, with Fr. dix, nier.

ex, ec, or ē, adv. and prep. [the form ē is not used before vowels; ec is not used before vowels; in old Latin (e.g. in Plautus)

it is used in compounds before f, e.g. efferre;

ex is used in compounds before consonants

c, h, p, q, s, t regularly and assimilated

before f; but with nouns, the use of ex

before these and other consonants is variable;

some set expressions have the same form invariably, as ex parte, ex sententiā, ex tempore, ē regione, ē re publicā, used adverbially.] I. Adv. (only in compounds).

F

F, f, the sixth letter of the Latin alphabet, occupies the same place as digamma in the Greek alphabet, to which it corresponds in form, though entirely different in phonetic character. 1. Initial f in Latin takes its rise from I. E. bh or (less frequently) from dh, sometimes irregularly from I. E. gh (which is properly represented by Latin h). Hence it corresponds to Gk. φ or θ, and at times to Gk. χ. Thus we have Gk. φῆψω beside Lat. fero. On the other hand we have Gk. θῆψ beside Lat. ferus; Gk. θύρα Lat. fores. And again we have Gk. χρίω beside Lat. frio. f occurs but little in the middle of Latin words, in which place b usually corresponds to φ, as in ambo (ἄμφω), nebula (νέφος). Though f most commonly represents Gk. φ (when initial), it was phonetically different, and was not, like φ, an aspirate. Assimilation is seen in offerō, differrō, efferrō, for offerō, dis-ferō, ec-ferō.

II. According to Grimm's law, Latin f, from bh, corresponds to b in Gothic, and to p (or b) in Old High German; thus, Lat. frater, Goth. brōthar, O. H. G. bruoder; whilst, when it arises from dh, it corresponds to Goth. d and O. H. G. t; thus, Lat. fores, Goth. dair and Eng. door, O. H. G. tor; and, when it arises from gh, to Goth. g and O. H. G. k (or g); thus Lat. fel, Eng. gall, O. H. G. galla. III. In the Romance languages f in general remains unchanged; sometimes, however, it changes: (i) (when it begins a word) to h; this occurs chiefly in Spanish, in which it is very common; thus, Lat. ferrum, Sp. hierro; Lat. filius, Sp. hijo; Lat. fabulari, Sp. hablar; Lat. facere, Sp. hacer; it also appears in Fr. hors from Lat. foris. (ii) Rarely into b: Lat. flocculus, It. bioccolo; Lat. forfex, It. forbice.

faba, ae, f. [cf. Gk. φακός, and perh. φάγειν], the broad bean : Pl., Cic., Verg., etc.; istaec in me cudetur faba, i.e. I shall smart for it, Ter. [It. fava; Fr. fève.]

G

G, g, indecl. n., or (sc. littera), f. the seventh letter of the Roman alphabet. I. a. C, not G, at first represented the guttural media in Latin; the pronunciation of C subsequently became identical with that of K; and the new symbol G was introduced. The earliest inscription in which it is found is the epitaph of Scipio Barbatus, which is not later than 234 B.C.

b. As an initial, g, in pure Latin words, enters into consonantal combination with l and r only; hence in roots which originally began with gn, the g was dropped in the classical period; thus gnascor, gnatus, gnosco, gnomen, became nascor, natus, nosco, nomen; but in compounds the g often reappears, as in cognatus, ignosco, agnomen. c. With s, g combines to form x; e.g. the stem reg- has NOM. sing. rex. Similarly in the perfect tenses of verbs, as rego, rexi. But sometimes the g disappears between two consonants, as in mulgeo, mulsi, fulgeo, fulmen. II. Latin g usually corresponds to orig. Indo-European g, and therefore to Greek γ, as in Lat. genus, Gk. γένος. Orig. gh (Gk. χ) is also represented in Latin by g when not initial, as in Lat. anguis, Gk. εγξ. Initial g from gh appears not to be found in Latin except where the g is followed by r, as in gratus, Gk. χαίρω. In a few words Latin g has arisen from orig. k; as in digitus, Gr. δάκτυλος. III. According to Grimm's law, Latin g, from Indo-European g, corresponds to k in Gothic and to ch in Old High German; thus we have Lat. genus beside Goth. kuni, Eng. kin, O. H. G. chind. IV. g before a, o, u, remains unchanged in French; before e and i it sometimes becomes s or c; thus Lat. fragea (from fragum), Fr. fraise; Lat. gingiva, Fr. gencive. It becomes j in jaune from Lat. galbinus, and jumeau from Lat. gemellus. It is sometimes omitted in French between vowels, as in nier from Lat. negare; trente from Lat. triginta; août from Lat. augustus. In Spanish, initial g sometimes becomes h, as in hermano from Lat. germanus.

H

H, h, the eighth letter of the Latin alphabet, has the place and form of the Greek Eta, which originally stood for the rough breathing. The Latin H, however, was quite different in phonetic character from the Greek spiritus asper, to which it never (except in borrowed words) corresponds. 1. Lat. h, has its origin regularly from initial gh (Gk. χ), as in Lat. hortus, Gr. χόρτος; and sometimes from bh (Gr. β), as in Lat. herba, compared with Gr. φωβή. Medial h in mihi is for b from bh. In traho, veho, h (from gh) occurs at the end of a root and it must have had a strong guttural sound. The combinations th, ph, ch, to represent θ, φ, χ, in words borrowed from the Greek, were of comparatively late introduction in Latin; they rarely appear in inscriptions before B.C. 94; in earlier periods the Greek aspirates were represented by t, c, p; and φ was sometimes represented by b, as in Bruges (Enn.) from Φρύγες. II. In the Romance languages initial h is often dropped; thus from Lat. habere we have It. avere, Fr. avoir; from Lat. hora, It. ora, Fr. or (adv.); from Lat. homo, Fr. on; from Lat. hordeum, Fr. orge; from Lat. haustare, Fr. ôter. III. a. As an abbreviation HH. stands for heredes. b. In HS for sestertius, H is not the letter of that shape, but the numeral II crossed, v. sestertius.

ha, hahae, hahabae, an exclamation. a. Of joy, satisfaction, exultation: Pl., Ter. b. Of laughter and esp. of derisive laughter: Pl., Ter.

I

I, i, the ninth letter of the Latin alphabet.

I. On the substitution of i for a and e, vide those letters. i takes the place of o in oblique cases from noun-stems in on, as cardo(n), cardinis, and hominis; in derivatives from stems in o, as multi-tudo and publi-cus; at the end of the first stem in compounds like multi-sonus; and in a few special instances, as in cognitus, and ille from ollus, olle. It is substituted for u in the DAT. and ABL. pl. of noun-stems in u, as fructi-bus, geni-bus; at the end of the first stem in compounds like aesti-fer; in superlatives, as well as in positive adjs. of similar form, as optimus (from optumus), finitimus. Long i has in some Latin words arisen from the diphthong ai, e.g. in the compounds of caedo, quaero, as occido, inquiro, and in iniquus from aequus; also from ei, as in dico, divus, liber. II. Consonantal i (formerly and wrongly written as j) represents a sound which corresponds in Latin to the orig. Indo-European and Sanskrit spirant y, as well as to the German j, and the English y (before a vowel). It must not be supposed similar to the French j, though the latter regularly represents it in derivatives from the Latin. There is no corresponding consonant in Greek. In several Latin words consonantal i corresponds to a Greek ζ, which arose from y preceded by a parasitic δ; thus, Lat. ingum, Gk. ζυγόν; Lat. ius (sauce), Gk. ζύμη, ζωμός. In at least one instance the I. E. y retained in Lat. i is represented by the rough breathing in Greek; Lat. iacur, Gk. ἱαπρ. The ancient grammarians state that the i-sound between two vowels was pronounced double; and hence, in such cases, some authors (as Cicero) repeated the i in writing, e.g. aiio (aiō), Maia (Maia), peiuis (peiuis), etc. Sometimes in like cases a tall i was written. III. In the Romance languages. A. Simple i. 1. accented i long is usu. unchanged; e.g. Lat. amicus, It. amico, Sp. amigo, Fr. ami; Lat. spina, It. spina, Sp. espina, Fr. épine. 2. accented i short us. changes to e in Italian and Spanish, but in French to oi; e.g. Lat. niger, It. nero, Sp. negro, Fr. noir; Lat. minus, It. meno, Sp. menos, Fr. moins. 3. accented i before a double consonant commonly becomes e; e.g. Lat. siccus, It. secco, Sp. seco, Fr. sec; Lat. crista, It. Sp. cresta, Fr. crête. But i followed by ng or gn generally becomes ei, and sometimes a, in French; e.g. Lat. pingere, cingere, lingua; Fr. peindre, ceindre, langue. Unaccented i is most commonly unchanged; it sometimes becomes oi. When a short vowel in Latin immediately precedes the accented syllable, it is lost in French; i is often in this position, and disappears accordingly; e.g. Lat. sanitatem, positura, septimana; Fr. santé, posture, semaine. B. Consonantal i. 1. into g, gi, or gg; e.g. Lat. Ianuarius, iam, maius, peiuis; It. gennaio, già, maggio, peggio. Lat. iuniperus, iuniz, Fr. genièvre, génisee. 2. into i: e.g. Lat. maior, baiulare, adiutare; Fr. maire, bailler, aider. 3. into y: e.g. Lat. iam, maior; Sp. ya, mayor. 4. irregularly into l: e.g. Lat. Iulius; It. luglio. 5. Omission of i: e.g. Lat. ieiunare; Fr. jeûner. IV. As an abbreviation I.O.M. signifies Iovi Optimo Maximo; I. R. Iuno Regina; I. V. T. Iulia Victrix Togata.

Iacchus, i, m. [*Iakchos]. I. a male deity connected with the mysteries at Eleusis. II. Bacchus. Transf. wine: (Silenum) infatuum hesterno Iaccho, Verg.
